

St. Peter's Church

in Frampton Cotterell is a prominent feature of the local landscape. There has been a religious building here for over a thousand years, ever since Saxon times, although most of the current building dates from the 1850s, when the Victorians added the north aisle and porch as well as battlements and statues of saints to the medieval tower. The church is made from local Pennant Sandstone, which was quarried along the Frome Valley.

Just north of the church is Centenary Field, which was opened in 1994 to celebrate one hundred years of Frampton Cotterell Parish Council. The field is managed for people and for wildlife and the Parish Council is working with the Hawk and Owl Trust (www.hawkandowl.org) to attract barn owls to hunt and nest here. The large metal pithead wheel commemorates both the nearby Roden Acre Mine, and the many generations of Frampton Cotterell miners who extracted iron ore during the nineteenth century. The ore was taken north to Iron Action by a dramway, which is now disused.
